Prenatal diagnosis of brain-eye-eye-brain: a report of two siblings. We report on the prenatal diagnosis of two fetuses with brain-eye-eye-brain, a disorder of development characterized by a non-separated optic nerve and severe anomalies of the basal ganglia and the corpus callosum. Prenatal ultrasonography showed an absent corpus callosum and a thickened optic nerve, while magnetic resonance imaging showed a non-separated optic nerve with colpocephaly and agenesis of the pituitary stalk. Postnatal brain and eye examination showed bilateral microphthalmia and agenesis of the optic nerve, hypoplasia of the pituitary gland and brain-eye-eye-brain. Neither of the affected siblings had a normal eye size and function and the orbits were small. They were born to unrelated parents without evidence of other members of this family having similar eye or brain abnormalities. Genetic counselling showed a 50% risk of recurrence. Brain imaging and eye examination should be performed on every child with suspected brain-eye-eye-brain and the parents should be advised about the recurrence risk.

Bromide counterflow peristaltic volumetric pump. A counterflow peristaltic volumetric pump is described. It is composed of a tubular pump, a transfer tube, a reservoir, and a thermostat at the extremity of the reservoir. The transfer tube is driven by an externally produced axial pressure, induced by the transfer of the substance from the reservoir to the transfer tube. The reservoir allows a permanent backflow to the upstream part of the system in case of any malfunction. I'm a firm believer in saying the right thing, and then the not saying the right thing, and then the right thing. And then the not saying the right thing, and then the saying the right thing. And then the saying the right thing and then the right thing and then the not saying the right thing. Ahhhh so much better... I had one last weekend. I'm hoping to get one again soon 2d92ce491b
