Publications, 1st.Comparison of flow cytometric analysis and fluorescence in situ hybridization of interphase nuclei in formalin-fixed, paraffin-embedded tissues: application to human breast carcinoma. We have previously reported the successful application of fluorescence in situ hybridization (FISH) to paraffin-embedded formalin-fixed tissues. FISH was used to map the chromosomal status of 139 human breast carcinoma cases. Currently the chromosome regions 7q31, 11p15, and 17p13 are commonly assayed and FISH has become an important adjunct to genetic analysis in these chromosomal regions. This paper details the optimization of the FISH protocol with emphasis on the use of immunofluorescence as a means of enhancing the detection of the chromosome-specific probe signal.
