The King's Speech - The king's speech - Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia The king's speech (pronounced ['kæɪn'.gəʃ.d]) is the title of a 1947 British biographical film based on the life of King George VI, the King of the United Kingdom and the monarch from 1936 to 1952, and his severe stammer, which made him the first King to need a speech therapist. The film was directed by David Lean and starred Laurence Olivier, Robert Donat and Gary Cooper as the title character, with Charles Laughton as his speech therapist. Donat, Olivier and Cooper are all nominated for the Academy Award for Best Supporting Actor for their performances in the film, but Cooper won for his performance in To Kill a Mockingbird. The film was a critical and commercial success. It was followed by a sequel, The Revenge of the Pink Panther (1975), featuring Peter Sellers and Peter O'Toole as the Pink Panther. There were several remakes, with other actors playing the King and with different plot lines. Plot A young Prince Albert is a young, handsome and charming man. But he is timid and quiet. His speech is not perfect and the prince stammers. As a child he is sent to France to be educated, but his mother, the Queen (Hepburn), instead arranges for him to be placed in a school where he can receive lessons from a specialist, Mr. Bernard Seddon (Cooper). At the school in France he meets an English girl, Mary Brown (Wise), and they fall in love. The Queen dislikes this because she does not want her son to marry. She knows that his marriage to another woman would give her countrymen a good reason to rebel against her, and that the relationship between her son and the daughter of a US Ambassador would inevitably lead to war. The Queen sends Prince Albert to England, to meet her other son, Prince Edward (Donat). The boys are good friends, but although Prince Albert is in love with Mary, Prince Edward has set his heart on marrying Princess Elizabeth (Hepburn), the oldest daughter of Queen Mary. The Queen is furious, and she sends Prince Albert away to school. She arranges for his tutor, Mr. Seddon, to give him lessons in public speaking. He also makes him wear
