The purpose of the study was to determine if maternal serum alpha-fetoprotein (MSAFP) concentrations during the first trimester of pregnancy are associated with specific diseases in the neonate. A prospective study was performed on 454 singleton pregnancies recruited from among 20-24 weeks' pregnant women who attended prenatal care clinics at a municipal hospital in Beijing, China. Maternal serum alpha-fetoprotein levels were measured with the ADVIA Centaur T120 analyzer. Maternal serum alpha-fetoprotein concentrations were tested with the Mann-Whitney U-test. Regression models were used to evaluate the associations of maternal serum alpha-fetoprotein levels with neonatal diseases. Maternal serum alpha-fetoprotein concentrations were below the limit of detection (1.1ng/ml) in 243 (53%) of the 454 pregnancies. A positive correlation was found between maternal serum alpha-fetoprotein concentrations and gestational age (r=-0.72, P90th centile (6.1ng/ml, 95% CI, 5.5-6.7ng/ml, P
