Facebook, Twitter, Google+, LinkedIn, and YouTube are the five most popular social networks. Facebook is a social network and website that focuses on personal networking and sharing of information. Facebook has more than 900 million active users. Facebook was originally intended as a status updating service with the name "Facemash," but eventually it was used to organize events and see what friends are up to. Facebook was bought by corporate giant, now archrival, Microsoft for $240 billion in stock in 2009. Twitter is an innovative micro-blogging service developed by Dick Costolo in 2007. It enables users to send and post 140-character messages called "tweets," and is used by news organizations and businesses. Although only 140 characters are allowed, users often write lengthy tweets in an abbreviated form. Google+ is a new social networking service for the Google universe that allows users to link their Google and G+ accounts, and features a larger online community. Google+ was launched in 2011 and introduced a profile-like feature that has been modified over time. LinkedIn is a professional social network with more than 100 million members. LinkedIn allows users to connect with colleagues and professionals in real time, exchange information, and establish a professional network. YouTube is an online video sharing site with more than a billion users per month. It allows users to upload and view videos for free. Sending and Receiving Email If you spend your days looking at text, then a good-quality email program is essential. You can keep in touch with colleagues, your clients and vendors, and customers in a convenient manner from any location where you have an Internet connection. The web is definitely the preferred way to get information and send messages, but nothing beats sitting in front of the computer to send and receive email. Email is easy to use: just type your message, hit send, and sit back as your email

[End-of-life care in the intensive care unit. Patient and family-physician experience]. Quality of end-of-life care has become an important issue in recent years, and a growing number of medical centres apply measures to promote this aspect of patient care. The present study was undertaken to evaluate and compare the family's and physician's experience of end-of-life care in the intensive care unit. We performed a prospective, multicenter questionnaire-based study in five intensive care units in Germany. The instrument contained 25 statements on background, experience and expectations. The questionnaire was distributed to family members of patients who had died in the intensive care unit and to the physicians who had attended the patient on that occasion. In all, 120 questionnaires were returned, for a response rate of 62.5 %; 98 were completed by the physicians and 22 by the relatives. Statements that were significantly more often rejected in the physician group were: "The physicians lack experience in end-of-life care" and "Patients should be allowed to die without agitation and inconvenience." In both groups the most frequent expectations for end-of-life care were the reliability of the physician and sufficient expertise to handle the patients' situation. The physicians judged the topic of end-of-life care as being underrepresented in their training. There are distinct differences in the expectations of family members and the physicians. The physicians are only half as likely to agree to statements on end-of-life care as are the relatives. Family-physician collaboration will be easier if there is more discussion of end-of-life care in the context of continuing education for the physicians. The physicians also need support with the relevant theoretical and practical issues of end-of-life care. Marun Bunga Tanah Abang Marun Bunga Tanah Abang (lit. Dow Jones's Indian finance channel, Zee Business, has been airing banned by the Indian Government, is in court, claiming the ban was unfair. "The channel has been ordered off-air until the proceedings of a single judge is quashed," says The Telegraph. It also notes that the channel "faced another setback when the Madras High Court upheld the government's order to remove the channel from the airwaves". Zee Business' website says it will be back. The Indian government has banned a television channel that "causes moral corruption of youth and values". According to an Indian government order, the channel was not in line with the government's stand on "family values and personal life", and that it denigrated women and "paved way for corruption of the youth by debasing their values". An anonymous reader quotes an unofficial report from the Times of India: The government-ordered ban on Zee Business, aired by Zee Media Corp, comes at a time when the Bharatiya Janata Party-led government is trying to deal a major blow to the women's movement, with one of the most controversial clauses in the controversial Juvenile Justice (Care and Protection of Children) Bill tabled by the government in the winter session of the Parliament.... Among the controversial provisions in the bill is one that prescribes up to three years of imprisonment for anyone who "publishes a photograph, picture or sketch of a minor which is indecent and relates to, among others, sexual abuse of the minor." The government order, dated June 18, specifies a series of channels and programmes that the "Government has determined that the programmes broadcast over these channels compromise the dignity of women". Zee Business has been broadcasting such things as the "effect of drunkenness on sexuality" and the "behaviour of homosexuals", with commentaries on prostitution, sex tourists, and homosexuality.
