Cannabis legalization and regulations and their impact on the work climate in the province of Saskatchewan. To examine the impact of legalized and regulated cannabis on the work climate in the province of Saskatchewan, including potential implications for staff safety, customer service, and market competition. A mixed-methods approach was used. In the first phase, a questionnaire was completed by all nurses employed by the Saskatchewan Ministry of Health in April 2019. A cross-sectional design was applied. A total of 285 questionnaires were completed. In the next phase, 200 randomly selected Saskatchewan cannabis retailers were surveyed.

Cannabis legalization and regulations had the most profound and lasting effect on the nursing work climate. Staff views of customer service experienced the least change. Nurses' feelings about safety did not change as a result of legalization. Decisions regarding cannabis were left to the discretion of pharmacies. Legislation governing the sale of cannabis products may affect the work climate for nurses in the province.

It is imperative that nursing administrators, policy makers, and practitioners share their understanding of these changes and their possible impact on the workplace and nursing practice.

The tide is turning The White House wants health care reforms. Obama even gave a speech on the subject on January 12. The evidence is just overwhelming that the question of health care reform is no longer a political football or the left's "all that matters" debate. It is our most pressing public policy issue, and I wonder how Obama can ignore this development. Health care reform must be done. The alternative is unthinkable. The question is: how much reform will be done? Perhaps this is the true health care debate: how much is acceptable when we all know that we will
