When you have time, use your computer. And then don't have time. And then have time to do it again. What? Too many spare moments going on in your life? No problem, you're not alone. It's human nature, and the only thing to do is to embrace it. If your computer is a part of your routine, then it's even more important that you make it work when you need it. It's why we're here, right? For you to use your computer. But when it breaks down - when it's slow, it's in front of you all the time, or when it freezes, it makes you want to scream - it's not the most pleasant experience, especially for somebody who's already got more on their plate than they can handle. We all have our moments, and it's probably true that you don't always want to use the phone company to get your PC fixed. You probably want something a little faster, more practical, a little cheaper and a little more efficient. So, where do you go to fix your PC? We're here to help you fix your PC, without having to call tech support or a repairman. You might think you know everything about your PC. You might be able to answer the question, 'What's my model number?' But, you probably don't know the answers to questions like this: What's wrong with my PC? What do I have to do to fix it? What does it cost? What do I have to do? In this guide, you'll find answers to all of these questions, so you know exactly what you need to do to fix your PC. To begin with, there are certain things you must know: What is my PC? What is it used for? How do I tell if it's working? What does my screen look like? What do I have to do to fix it? What do I have to do to keep it working? What's wrong with my PC? How do I fix it? What does my screen look like? My PC is broken. When I boot it up, it has problems. My monitor turns itself off or the system doesn't boot. What's wrong with it? Your PC has the same kind of problems that you'll encounter if you have a car breakdown. You know
