Show HN: A distributed RDBMS called Postgres (free open source) - indescions_2018 ===== toto444 Interesting, but I wonder how it compares to [ ~~~ indescions_2018 Disclaimer: this is my project. I think the focus on Postgres' useful features is what makes it stand out. While it is not the fastest or easiest to set up, if you care about server-side functions and tables/views (i.e. the real business application) it is really the most performant way to go. I like the convenience of Dokku and hope the whole stack is easier and available to non-developers. But for the vast majority of users, the key is backing up to S3 (or other persistent storage) and then deploying a zip file (rather than Docker). This is where the release notes come into play and improve upon the experience. Yes, this will make deploying your application 10x easier than with Dokku (maybe even 100x), but with the same underlying technology (which is a huge benefit!).
