CHANGE IP Changer, which, as its name suggests, enables you to change IP settings, is a lightweight and simple application for configuring your local area network (LAN) to another IP address. You just need to enter or select the IP configuration you want to change, select the network adapter, set up the new IP settings and then restart the computer. Some default values like DNS servers, gateway, subnet mask, and your IP address are taken from the operating system (for example, from the network adapter), but you can also provide them manually. One big advantage of this software is that it doesn't use other software to do this task. CHANGE IP is an independent utility, which uses only Windows API functions that ensure a seamless integration into Windows without any compatibility issues. CHANGE IP provides you with a program that keeps all the values you set in the various steps. This includes both predefined and user-provided values. In other words, if you create a profile, all the settings will be saved and reused when you want to change IP settings using that profile again. Besides, the program comes with a very user-friendly interface. The first thing you see when you launch the application is a wizard that will walk you through each step of the configuration process. The software also features a user guide for complete overview and explanations of all options. CHANGE IP also supports the network adapter and switches in the area of the auto detect. This includes WiFi, Bluetooth, USB, and onboard Ethernet adapters. You can choose to have the change happen upon detecting the network adapter, or manually set it up. In the first case, the change will be done automatically, but if you choose to do it manually, it won't need to restart your computer, as you would otherwise have to do. The program works on x86 and x64 Windows operating systems. IP

Publisher's Description: The Portable Shock IP Changer is a powerful IP switching tool, designed to help users switch IP address by creating profiles with the desired settings and assigning to the adapters. Profiles may contain an IP address, a subnet mask and gateway, a DNS server, a default printer and a favorite internet site. This tool is designed to automatically detect all available network adapters and automatically create profiles as soon as a connection is established. The IP address settings are saved and can be changed later if needed. The portable IP Changer is an IP switching tool that can allow you to change IP settings on your network adapters. The program works similar to what you might do by using a command prompt window but for any chance you don't want to go through this process, this handy software will allow you to simply enter a IP address, mask, gateway, DNS, and default printer then save them under your profile. It includes the ability to select a network adapter and save it to a Profile, it automatically gets your current IP address, DNS settings, gateway, and default printer then it saves it to a profile. This program does not require installation, just run the executable, connect your network adapters that are connected to your local area network and the program will detect all network adapters connected to your computer, then you enter information to create a profile for each of them, the only thing left to do is to choose which profile you would like to use and connect to the network, when you are connected, you can simply double click on the network adapter to apply the new settings. This program can also detect the default printer on your system, so you can save that as well. The IP Changer has the ability to save up to 5 IP settings as profiles, and it also includes a default profile to use when you start the program, you may delete the one you don't want to use. This software also includes the ability to save the IP settings as a text file or excel file, but only when a network connection is active, and only one setting can be saved to the file at a time.
