festofluidsim42englishcrack Crack MacFacebook has filed a lawsuit against the European Union in the United States to fight an order forcing the social network to change its terms. Facebook, founded in 2004, created a new legal team to wage a battle with European officials over what they say are the company's "illegal privacy practices." On Wednesday, it filed the suit in the US District Court for the Northern District of California, according to court documents. The EU's General Data Protection Regulation, also known as the "right to be forgotten," gives any EU resident the right to ask a search engine to remove links to outdated and no longer relevant information about them. "In a free, democratic society, access to information about any person in the world is fundamental to maintaining a functioning government," read the lawsuit. "It is a pre-requisite to democracy. Erasing a person's past on the internet would be like robbing him or her of a most basic right." Facebook's chief privacy officer, Erin Egan, reiterated those concerns in a blog post Wednesday. "We started as a platform for people to make the most of their lives, and as Facebook's mission has evolved over time, we've always tried to advance this over other concerns," Egan wrote. "We make different decisions with different principles in mind when they come to the fore in challenges, rather than simply following rules. However, over the past year and as GDPR comes into effect, we've heard a growing chorus of voices telling us that we can't choose which rules to follow anymore, 1cdb36666d
