Q: Arranging a pair of balls randomly on a (square) table Two players sit across from one another and each is given 2 fair balls. Player 1 puts one ball on one end of a (square) table and player 2 puts the other ball on the other end of the table. Player 1 doesn't know where the balls are placed in this way. If a player passes to him/her an amount of money, the player who doesn't pass doesn't have the option to peek and doesn't get to see where the other ball is placed. The player who pass has the option to peek. The game continues till someone receives a pair of balls. The player who receives a pair of balls is the winner and gets the winnings. I found this game in a newspaper. The entry to a triangular tournament. A: Firstly, I must confess that I'm intrigued to figure out what a "square table" has to do with the question, but to put it bluntly, the game is easy to solve. The player at each end puts one ball on the table (place it anywhere they wish), and we don't care what player this is, as long as we do the same thing. Having done this, let's say the first player places the ball on the left hand side. The second player peeks, and they pass the money. This leaves us with a  $2 \times 2$  game with no information asymmetry, but we've only lost half the information. But wait! The first player keeps the ball in his hand; the second player cannot see it. Now, the first player now moves to place the ball somewhere on the diagonal of the table, and the second player calls 'halt!' as they look on their side of the table. The game now concludes, with the first player reaching the objective. But again, wait: the first player now peeks, and they win the game as it was a  $2 \times 2$  game with information asymmetry. [OUTLOOK] Error 2525 occur when using Remo Repair Word with Outlook. Don't miss any of my updated videos: . . . Today a man says to me " Why don't you do what a woman does, that is to kill them." After that he adds, "why do you like us and want to have us as your sons, when what you can do is kill us." So the conclusion of this story can be very simple, we women are not like them, we are not lazy and accept to live the way we want. If you want to kill me, do so, and if you want to have me as your son, accept me as one of your sons. Remember that it's not the news that "I hate women", on the contrary, it's something that I can't help, it's something that happened. And that's why women need to embrace themselves, and to learn to respect themselves, and to know what they can be, and what they can not be, because as women, we have still a lot to learn. -Gloria Steinem

Photo: Roberto Cruz/The CW The CW's small-screen debut of the superhero saga Riverdale is fast approaching, and with that comes the imminent return of a much-missed face. Jennifer "Jenny" Cooper (played by Lili Reinhart) showed up last season to reunite with her ex-bestie (she and Jughead were high-school sweethearts, and he's been her steady since) Betty (Lili's real-life BFF), who has decided to take another shot at dating Jughead. But, now that Jughead has dumped her after their reunion, Betty's about to take a big risk in her love life. And it turns out Jenny Cooper doesn't know Betty as well as she thought. "I was a little surprised when Lili called me," said Reinhart, who's currently in a relationship with Darren Criss, her co-star in the hit musical Grease: Live, which recently announced that its 2017 Broadway run will be its last. "I was like, 'Wait, a friend of mine — her name's [Lili's character] Cheryl (Myrtle, the other main character, is a monster!) — she was going to be in the finale of the show, and she was going to come out
