I am creating a parser that will be run on the server, and it is responsible for triggering off certain events. What I need is to be able to run another task once a specific timeout has elapsed (or am I going about this the wrong way?), but I don't want to keep tying up server resources with the parsing. setInterval() seems great for this, but is there a way to only "start" the thing I need once a certain time has elapsed? A: You probably want to use a setTimeout, instead of a setInterval will execute a function that you specify. A: setTimeout accepts a callback and can be
