The present invention relates to a wireless/wireline telecommunication system and, more particularly, to a system for communicating voice, data, telefax, facsimile and/or modem signals. Mobile data services such as narrowband data services are often limited to certain areas of cities, due to the problems of limited bandwidth and the inability to effectively reuse capacity and overcome interference within the limited bandwidth allocated for data services. These data services are also limited to the available channels defined by the band plans of wireless carriers. The present invention provides a way for carrying voice, data, telefax, facsimile and modem signals, without being limited to the channel plan of the wireless carriers. It provides the opportunity to use more frequencies in an efficient manner and without interference by other users.

The other (conglomerate) is to go for a basic shape, not to worry if the details come out "off" if it works for your design. That's basically what I'm doing: I'm just going to say that I'm starting a company and need an image that can be used in an ad on tv as well as on the side of a truck in a trade show. The company name is Wheelman.(Wheelman Inc.) I'm thinking of just sticking with the basic design. As I've been able to tell you all before, I feel a little stuck as to what the image will look like. I've just gone with the basic circle logo with the company name in it.(Wheelman) This is a great forum and I'm truly thankful for all the input. It's not a matter of whether it's totally horrible or totally awesome.. it just depends on how well it works with what I'm trying to do with it. I tried it with: DateTime dt1=DateTime.Today.Date DateTime dt2=DateTime.Today.DayOfYear and other similar solutions, and also I used the DateTime.Now. but I can't to make it work. How can I do this? A: You must select the correct time zone. By default it is automatically converted to local time, so your code doesn't work. Laparoscopic para-aortic lymph node sampling is a procedure for diagnosing primary breast cancer and for staging when breast surgery is not an option due to the patient's needs or surgical contraindications. According to a recent study in the Journal of Surgical Oncology, this procedure has a 97% sensitivity, a 91% specificity, a 91% accuracy, and a 54% negative predictive value. Procedure Laparoscopic para-aortic lymph node sampling is performed using a 2 mm laparoscopic trocar and a laparoscope to acquire cancerous samples. There are no incisions made. The laparoscope can be inserted through either the subcostal or the infra-clavicular region. The median incision is 9 cm for the subcostal area and 5 cm for the infra-clavicular region. A laparoscope and a camera are used to look for visible lymph nodes after the uterus, ovaries, and the para-aortic space are assessed. The procedure is most often performed on women who are at intermediate or high risk of breast cancer, as the procedure carries a risk of complications. Patients with a history of contraindications to surgery should also be examined. Women with less than 5 suspicious lymph nodes at ultrasound, women with an average-size tumor less than 2 cm, women with low-grade, node-negative tumors, women who have undergone radiation therapy for the breast, and women without metastases elsewhere in the body are candidates for this procedure.
