Serum enterocyte-secreted protein is elevated in patients with Helicobacter pylori infection. Fecal antigen or stool antigen test is used in the diagnosis of Helicobacter pylori infection. Stool antigen test only detects previous H. pylori infection. The purpose of this study was to measure serum levels of enterocyte-secreted protein in patients with H. pylori infection. Serum enterocyte-secreted protein levels were measured by ELISA in 144 patients with dyspepsia and 42 asymptomatic controls. H. pylori infection was confirmed by histology, or the presence of urea breath test or H. pylori stool antigen. The levels of serum enterocyte-secreted protein were significantly increased in the patients with H. pylori infection compared to the asymptomatic controls (p Overall Vision Vision Originality Originality Technique Technique Impact Impact As a rubber figurine... there's really not much I can say about this. As a character, there's the usual problems most of us deal with when drawing, like balance, proportions and perspective. It is a bit off as far as hip length for the character, but I don't think you'd notice it unless you really compare one with the other. There's also a bit of waste on the part where the arm is joined with the torso. This was intentional in the character's design, but is not very noticeable
